"Spooning Himself." He Telis Young Girl Who Asks About His Fishing.

"There are two kinds of spooning, said Sam, the turnkey down at the dock of the Police Court, this morning. Sam is always ready for a pleasant chat and an exchange of repartee. In fact, he has such a joviel way with him, that by the time he gets through calling pet names to some of the victims in the pen, joshing others, and smiling on all generally, they have all been convinced that they are enjoying a pleasant holi-an experience that befell him recently down on the Basin. Sam is a great fisher, and declares that out of the 24 fisher, and declares that out of the 24 days in the year when fishing is good, there are not two that do not find him out with his rod and spoon. And the story proved that Sam not only is a good fisher, but that he also has an eye for the artistic, and that if he had had a chance to develop his talent along artist lines instead of along the line of city parentage to the unfortunates who are turned over to his care every day from the police precincts of the District, he might have put the sunshine onto canvas, instead of in the souls of the downcast man, woman, and girl in the pen. woman, and girl in the pen.

Fishing On Embankment. the embarkment that is well-known to all the amorous couples, far and wide, throughout the city. The sun was shin-ing brightly and, caught by the ripples on the bosom of the broad Potomac, secame converted into myriads of dia-

Sam was not so engrossed in his fishing that he could not see two young persons, a girl and boy, settle themselves down on the grassy bank not far from him. According to Sam the girl had a dress of light texture, the kind that is suitable for the hot weather, and she was a beauty. The boy was not bad looking, either. In fact, both of them were there with the goods as far as looks went. They didn't happen to see Sam at first, but goods as far as looks went. They didn't happen to see Sam at first, but he couldn't but help seeing them, and he didn't care much if he did.

Presently, the glint of Sam's spoon, a bait for enticing his fish, caught the eye of the girl, and from the spoon she discovered the fisherman the arrangement that he uses instead of Two Kinds of Spooning. What are you doing?" she asked

"Why, I am spooning," he replied.
Now, you are doing one kind of spooning, but I am doing another kind."
Sam didn't say that he regretted that Sam didn't say that he regretted that he wasn't engaged in the other variety of spooning, but he at least had an appreciative eye for the picture of youthful love and happiness that had as its setting the curving shore of the Basin, with its grass and willows, where Sam the turnkey loves to drop the line for fish.

Washington business men will unite in helping to make that slogan famous. For years the "Made in Ger-Sam had a story this morning about many" inscription has been a national advertisement for the business of that nation. Other nations, in a lesser degree, have made their national trade-mark a business asset. From now on, if Washington business men, in conjunction with others all over the country, can help the idea, the "Made in America" phrase will be a commercial asset.

Though Washington is not an industrial center, the Capital's business men assert that their response to the nation-wide movement to boost American products will reflect This was the story.
